Comments:

Whether to modify a scheduling order requires a showing of good cause and an exercise of the court's discretion. Both sides have identified valid considerations. The court finds more persuasive the points raised by Hawk and has placed particular reliance on the views expressed by the Receiver. Stream's reply cites discovery deficiencies. The court is prepared to rule promptly on any motion to compel. At this point in the case, any opposition to a motion to compel must be filed within 48 hours after the filing of the motion, and any reply will be due 24 hours after the filing of the opposition. The parties may agree to a different schedule or seek one for good cause shown.
